Tracking Tuberculosis: Waging War on one of the World's Deadliest Diseases Karen Gaskell
People living in the U.S. and other developed countries are under the false impression that tuberculosis (TB) is a disease of the past. Worldwide, more than 9 million people fall ill with TB annually and almost 2 million people die of TB-related complications, according to the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. TB is a serious infectious disease that can strike any part of the body but most often attacks the lungs.

“Tracking Tuberculosis: Waging War on one of the World’s Deadliest Diseases,” provides a closer look at TB trends and examines efforts in place to stop the spread of the disease. Recent studies on TB vaccines, prevention, screening and treatment also are included in this next.

Only the most credible medical experts and journals including the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the New England Journal of Medicine were referenced when compiling “Tracking Tuberculosis: Waging War on one of the World’s Deadliest Diseases.”
