Midway through her family's trek across the Plains to South Dakota, Helena's father and brother disappear, leaving her to fend for herself in the middle of winter, all alone. Deciding to survive no matter what the cost, she makes it through the tough winter, only to be discovered by a Sioux Indian when she is in her most vulnerable state! Despite the rough start to their relationship, Helena quickly becomes attracted to this mischievous, handsome man who helped save her from her hardships.

Mankato has never known love, until he meets Helena. Her feistiness and determination to speak her mind shows him just how strong she is- and that she is just the kind of woman that can handle him. But it is not accepted for a white woman to be with a Sioux man- so he must completely let her go. This proves to be a lot harder than he thought, and the thought of her being with another man is enough to drive him crazy!

Will Mankato be able to contain his passion for Helena?
Will Helena decide to face her deepest fear and fight for her and Mankato?
