Public Sector Ethics in Collaborative Multi-Party Negotiations: Workbook George R Sranko
This workbook provides workshop leaders with a concise framework for considering ethical considerations that may arise during resource negotiations. With one copy for each participant, workshop leaders will have a stand-alone module to facilitate structured discussion for 4-6 hours in a workshop setting. The workbook provides a concise study guide and attractive handout for participants to retain. This workbook has been developed to assist public sector professionals, organizations, and groups seeking practical frameworks for addressing complex ethical issues. The material will be of particular interest to stakeholders, practitioners, and negotiators involved in land and resource management. Public officials, in addition to being participants in negotiations, have a facilitative and decision-making role to play in their official capacity. It is understood that readers of this workbook will be familiar with consensus building techniques, dialogue versus debate, collaborative decision-making and interest-based negotiation. Learning Objectives: After considering the issues raised and having frank and open discussions, readers should be able to: - list some of the core values and virtues of ethical public service; - demonstrate an understanding of ethical issues involved in negotiating; and, - outline a rational framework for resolving moral dilemmas.
