LOVE IS LIKE THAT is the story of two people who not only stayed together for a lifetime but stayed in love for a lifetime. Given the differences in their upbringing, the reader has to wonder how such a thing is possible. She was born and raised in a rural area of southern Ohio; he was reared in the suburbs of a large city 90 miles north. She had a miserable high school experience; he had a happy one. She grew up in a large, stable family with three brothers and a sister; he was an only child living with his mother through two divorces and a third marriage to an alcoholic. She was an excellent student; he was mediocre. Her father believed she would nevewr marry; his mother thought his bride was, at the very least, a questionable choice. On top of that, the stutter-step start of their courtship did not auger well for the future. Whether their eventual union began as a matter of sheer luck or some sort of manifest destiny, the reader will have to decide.
