Dragon with the Girl Tattoo: The Heiress & The Detective Case One Scott F Neve
*Based on the characters created by Scott F Neve in The Heiress & The Detective origin short story
The detective strolled out of the front door of the Chinatown bar as if nothing could shake his world. He nonchalantly walked up beside a beat cop who was standing over a dead body. The cop glanced up and then he gave a great sigh of relief.
"Thank goodness it's you," he said softly, "I was afraid it might be this guy's enemies. I accidentally shot off one round when I heard his terrified scream over my head. And then he landed at my feet. He died instantly. It scared the starch out of me. It's no suicide. The murderers must have thrown him off the roof of his fireworks factory, right there."
The heiress sucked in some air by accident and coughed before she said, "But that building is over one block away. How could any man throw another human being that far?"
"Maybe it wasn't a man," suggested the detective.
The superstitious policeman whispered, "Maybe it was a devil."
The detective bent down on one knee as he peered closely at the tattoo on the spine of the international gangster. Painted with permanent inks there was a magnificent gold dragon and on its scaled flank was a tattoo of a girl. Her shapely curves and long limbs, oval face and smiling eyes were unmistakable. It was the very image of the comely heiress.
"Now what on earth is she doing there?" the detective asked the dead man but he got no response.
His bride began to turn a pale green at the gills as she whispered, "I think I need a drink."
The detective grinned like a prizewinning fighter as he said, "Now that's the girl that I know and adore."
